SUBJECT: CCBP Seed Funds

On behalf of the Center for Community-Based Partnerships, I am pleased to announce our sixth call for Seed Fund projects.

This program has been an outstanding success, returning to the campus more than $12 for each $1 awarded, or more than $2.5 million since 2006. Congratulations to all of you previous winners.

And I also want to congratulate the Proposal Support Committee who make the funding recommendations to me. Led by Annette Watters, this committee has recognized the potential in work that has now been published in the nation's finest engaged scholarship journals, including our own JCES, and been featured at the leading engaged-scholarship conferences nationally and internationally.

With this letter is a one-sheet, back and front, application form with instructions. We have tried to keep the requirements simple and hope that many of you will submit your proposals right away. The deadline to get your no-more-than-six-page application to my office is Wednesday, September 21.

Next spring we will have an online form and a deadline that will allow us to recognize the winners at our annual Awards Luncheon and you to get your project going before fall semester begins.

Best of luck in 2011–2012.
